Department of Biology

Two Tenure-Track Positions: Evolution and Neurobiology

The Biology Department at the University of the South seeks two tenure-track assistant professors for positions in one of the nation's top liberal arts institutions. The positions are in Evolution and Neurobiology. Both professors will contribute toward teaching at the introductory level and in advanced courses in their area of specialty. The University has a 3/2 teaching load with both lecture and lab sections counting toward that total. Successful candidates will be enthusiastic about teaching in the context of the liberal arts tradition in education, and will maintain active research programs with opportunities for undergraduate involvement.

Evolution. We seek candidates for a tenure-track position whose teaching and research interests center on some aspect of evolution. Teaching responsibilities include an upper level evolution course, other courses in the candidate’s area of specialty, and regular participation in our introductory courses.

Neurobiology. We seek candidates for a tenure-track position whose teaching and research interests center on molecular and/or cellular neuroscience. Teaching responsibilities include an introductory cellular/molecular neuroscience course, other courses in the candidate’s area of specialty, and regular participation in our introductory cell and molecular biology course. The successful candidate will contribute to the interdisciplinary Neuroscience program that includes faculty from the departments of Psychology and Chemistry, among others.

Review of applications will begin on September 15, 2016. Applications will continue to be accepted until the position is filled.

Interested candidates should submit a cover letter, CV, teaching and research statements, graduate and undergraduate transcripts (unofficial accepted), and three letters of reference* to:
